HUB FISHERMAN DISAPPEARS FROM TRAWLER'S DECK

Left Deck House While Craft Was Off
Thacher's Last Evening—Not Seen After That

Falling overboard in some unexplained manner, Joseph Frigano, 25 years old of 274 North street, Boston, one of the crew of the Boston trawler Providenza, lost his life late last evening while the craft was steaming past Thacher's Island, bound for home.

Four miles east of the island, Frigano is said to have come out of the deck house and walked aft. That was the last seen of him. Fifteen minutes later one of the crew called for him and when he did not answer, an investigation was made but he was nowhere in sight. Not an outcry of any kind was heard, and it is believed that in the rolling of the craft in a stiff southwest chop, he lost his balance and fell into the sea.

The accident was reported to Capt. John Glynn of the Rockport coast guard station, and he and his crew went to the spot where the man was last seen but after cruising about for some time in the station's power boat, abandoned the search.

ASSISTED CRIPPLED

DRAGGER TO PORT

A few hours after leaving the Boston Fish Pier yesterday on her way to the fishing grounds, Boston auxiliary dragger, Rita B., Captain Azro Bly, was assisted back again by the coast guard patrol boat CG-151, which fell in with her at a point two miles east of Boston Lightship. A burned-out bearing in the engine rendered the vessel helpless and unable to proceed. Her plight was discovered by the patrol, which gave her a lift back into port. Repairs were started at once, and the Rita B. will probably be ready to go out again today. She is owned by Busalachhi Brothers.
